INTRODUCTION TO HOMEOPATHY

Homeopathy is based on the universal healing principle of “like cures like” (Latin: Similia Similibus Curentur). This means that if you take a substance in nature that causes a specific, unique diseased-state in a healthy individual, that very same substance will cure another person who is ill with that same diseased-state, regardless of whether or not he or she was previously influenced by that substance.

We know what unique diseased-state a certain substance will be able to cure by conducting a test of the substance on healthy individuals. This is called “a proving.” A proving is the administering of a substance, prepared into the form of a remedy, to healthy volunteers (provers) until specific characteristics and symptoms are exhibited. In taking the substance repeatedly, the prover adopts the characteristics of the substance.

It should be noted that not all symptoms caused by the substance are disease symptoms. The symptoms are the way the substance affects the individual in their sleep habits, food desires, fears, anxieties, choice of clothing, perception of reality, health, interaction with their friends and loved ones, and many more ways.

When you read books about the different substances employed as homeopathic remedies (Materia Medica), you get a good understanding of what state the remedy will cause in a healthy individual and what sick states the remedies will cure when they closely match those same sick states.

For example if someone is affected by the venom of the Bushmaster snake (Lachesis mutans) he or she can exhibit a wide range of symptoms—heart palpitations, intense jealousy and possessiveness, paranoia, many fears and delusions, an aversion to having anything around the neck, purplish discolorations and much hemorrhaging. It is amazing that people can get into this same state without ever having been bitten by the snake. How is that possible? Perhaps their snake-like jealousy, possessiveness, and suspicion pushes them into the pathological state in which they will need the remedy prepared from Lachesis mutans' venom to cure them. Or perhaps their astrological vibration put them into sympathetic resonance with the snake so that when they get sick, they will adopt characteristics that those bitten or affected by the poison of the snake develop. Perhaps homeopathy reveals to us that every state of illness that a human being can get into has a substance in nature that is homeopathically curative for that specific state. This conjures up the mystery of the Universe that such correlations can even exist!

Therefore, we have a beautiful medicine that looks to the diseased-state of the person and matches it to a substance that causes the same diseased-state when it is administered to a healthy individual.

The greater the sensitivity in an individual, the more he or she is affected by a vibration acting upon them. Adam and Eve were in a state of perfect sensitivity. They were not prepared for the vibration that would begin to divide their consciousness so that it could know itself as separate. In fact, we can say that there was not even one tiny amount of resistance in them, for the state in which they existed was One with the Will of God. Thus, Adam and Eve were excellent provers, but they got stuck in proving by adopting the characteristics of the Tree of Knowledge that they passed on to all of us.
